A patient with refractory acute graft-versus-host disease following allogeneic peripheral blood stem cell transplantation had been receiving oral corticosteroids with minimal response. An immunosuppressive regimen of cyclosporin A and methylprednisolone was started for the diagnosis of acute graft-versus-host disease. Due to a poor clinical response, the use of an alternate immunosuppressive agent, tacrolimus, was attempted. The patient's clinical status quickly improved, and a high-dose cyclosporin A regimen was replaced by low-dose tacrolimus. The patient was eventually tapered off the corticosteroids. At 2 years, the patient continues to receive tacrolimus and has had no acute graft-versus-host disease relapses. In conclusion, tacrolimus was effective in a patient with steroid-refractory acute graft-versus-host disease.Switzerland's president will hold talks with Turkey over the expulsion of a Swiss diplomat amid the row over Ankara's purchase of a Russian missile system. The European country is "one of Turkey's closest friends and partners," says Josef Ostermayer in Geneva, adding that Switzerland is "deeply saddened by the end of a friendly, trusting and long-standing relationship". He says his country "will work constructively for the maintenance of a strong bilateral relationship, regardless of the circumstances and without exclusion or bias." Switzerland has recalled its ambassador after a Turkish court banned two Swiss citizens from flying to Turkey. A Turkish court on Thursday ruled that the two men, arrested in March, are guilty of having links to a group Ankara says was involved in an attempted coup. "There is no reason to expel or close any embassy," Ostermayer says. He says "one of the first diplomatic steps" is to "analyse all contacts which have been restricted by the Turkish authorities in the recent past". The two Swiss citizens in question were arrested in March over an alleged violation of the Turkish government's terrorism laws. The Swiss Federal Council, or executive, said in a statement that it had "dismissed the two diplomats and ordered the Swiss representation in Turkey to close its doors." Earlier, the foreign ministry said it was "carefully reviewing" the court's decision and that 61a27515f5
