CASABLANCA

Symbol and guiding point of the V Column in Casablanca is Paul Henreid, played by Paul Henreid, as Victor Laszlo, escaped Czech underground leader, et. here, and feared by the Nazis. His arrival in Casablanca is a tip-off to the Nazis that trouble is coming.

The Nazi swastika casts a shadow over Casablanca in the person of Major Strasser, portrayed by Conrad Veidt. Claude Rains, as Captain Renault, French Prefect of Casablanca, "collaborates" secretly with the Nazi major in the cause of victory — for our side.

In Rick's, an American cafe in Casablanca run by Humphrey Bogart, refugees from Nazi Europe gather nightly to while away the days waiting for passage to America. Here a refugee offers Bergman, a valuable accomplice. This, played by Ingrid Bergman, a valuable ring to raise money for his passage. The hero of the Fighting French, just arrived in Casablanca, Laszlo thus makes contact with the underground.

Fires for a "bunk". Major Strasser, Nazi strong in Casablanca, shoots it out in the exciting climax with Humphrey Bogart.

Trainers die, even in Casablanca. Peter Lorre, as Ugarte, whines vainly for help when the net closes in.

Laszlo returns from a raided underground meeting with a significant bullet wound on his neck. His value to the V Column in Casablanca at its end, Laszlo asks Bogart's aid in escaping. But their work is done... and the day of liberation is near.
